Step out... in faith, trust

T. SHANE OILMAN/Mustang Daily

Kris Wayland, on left, and Becky Grey, blindfolded, cross the street on campus in a 'blind trust walk' as part of their human relations class. The idea is to build a bond of trust, they said. Students who participate in the exercise say that it also makes them more aware of sounds and noise and, therefore, more dependent on their ears.

Fraternity denied general use permit

By Steve Jones
Staff Writer

A fraternity's hopes of gaining a general use permit ended Tuesday night with a unanimous City Council vote to deny its application.

The permit would have allowed Alpha Upsilon to have Greek letters on its Foothill Boulevard house and to hold social functions.

Fraternity President Jens Wessel said he was optimistic going into the City Council meeting because of reforms recently adopted by his house.

These reforms included a comprehensive neighborhood management plan, a ban on alcoholic beverages at social events and "quiet hours" from 10 p.m. to 10 a.m. on weekends and 8 p.m. to 8 a.m. on weeknights.

Alpha Upsilon's reforms fell short in the face of overwhelming opposition by neighbors, who overflowed the council chambers. The neighbors had over 60 pages of documentation against the fraternity and a petition with over 200 neighborhood signatures.

"The neighbors were very organized," Wessel said. "They came out in force and that caused the city to deny our permit."

City Councilman Allen Settle called the decision "a sad commentary" but one forced by the huge turnout against the fraternity.

"It was a crowd as big as I've ever seen," Settle said.

But Tuesday night was not the first time Alpha Upsilon has been faced with opposition by neighbors. Two years ago, while in its Palm Street residence, the fraternity almost had its permit revoked because of neighbor complaints about noise.

The revocation plans were dropped when the fraternity decided to move.

Settle also pointed out the bad timing of Alpha Upsilon's application. Much of the crowd was at the meeting to speak out in favor of a proposed ordinance prohibiting six or more unrelated individuals to live in a single-family house. This discussion almost directly preceded Alpha Upsilon's on the council's agenda.

"A high percentage of neighborhood residents were there to preserve the single-family aspects of their R-1 (single family homes) zone," Settle said.

Although the proposed ordinance would not affect Alpha Upsilon, which is in a multiple-family housing zone, it did contribute to what some students present called a "student-bashing" atmosphere.

Councilwoman Penny Rappa spoke for the majority of the councilmembers and crowd when she said, "I don't have a whole lot of sympathy this evening (for Alpha Upsilon's plight)."

Much of the problem surrounding the fraternity lies with past confrontations with the city for what Councilwoman Peg Pinard has in the past called "animal house" tactics.

Both Settle and Wessel agree the problem is the fraternity's credibility.

"They wanted us to change and we showed them we have changed," Wessel said. "The message received is that we have no credibility."

Greeks set for Rush

By Steve Jones
Staff Writer

For some students, rushing means more than making a mad dash for class.

It's almost time for IFC Rush, when fraternities show what they're all about.

The Inter-Fraternity Council Fall Rush 1989 begins this Sunday with the "Meet the Fraternities" kickoff barbecue at noon on Dexter Lawn. To participate in the barbecue and the rest of rush week, a prospective rushee must purchase a rush card in the University Union or at the barbecue. The cost this year is $12.

Rush week is a series of parties and other events thrown by fraternities that give the houses a chance to get to know those interested in membership.

If invited to join a house, students must first go through a pledge period before becoming an active member. Pledge programs vary from house to house.

The Sunday barbecue will feature guest speakers, including Cal Poly's greek-system adviser, Walt Lambert, and a California Highway Patrol officer. The rushees will also get a chance to speak with members from all 14 IFC fraternities.

"It's basically just an ice breaker for prospective rushees to have a chance to get a look at what the greek system has to offer," said IFC Rush Chairman Rob Wardell.

Individual house rushes begin Monday, Sept. 25, and run through the following Monday. Bids to pledge a particular house go out on Tuesday, Oct. 3, and pinning takes place the following day.

Wardell, also a member of Delta Tau fraternity, outlined some changes in this year's rush. Each house is allowed only two days to serve alcohol if they so choose. This reduction in the number of "wet" days from four during last spring's rush is the result of a push toward a "dry" rush by many national fraternities already conducting a completely

From the editors' circular file

Predictable television still relaxes

Everyone says how stupid television is, and it is.

I used to love TV when I was a kid. I knew all the shows, all the channels, all the times. I knew that the Brady Bunch came on Channel 8 at 8 p.m. Thursdays. I knew Maggi Scuri was (and still is) the anchorwoman on Channel 11 in San Jose. I knew philosophical wisdom like "It can cut through a tin can and STILL remain razor-sharp!"

Now, I'm (supposedly) a man, and I have put away my childish things. There's a TV in my cave, but I don't watch it too much. Yet, whenever the TV is on, the actual entertainment isn't garnered from the show's story line; rather, the fun comes in predicting how shows will come out.

Take a typical action-adventure show: in the first 15 minutes, the conflict's introduced, usually a) some evil developer/real estate/Mafia shark is foreclosing on some family's land, or b) a wealthy/powerful-type person hires/befriends the leads in the cast, or c) someone's been murdered and let's get to the bottom of it. Then commercials. Then back into the second 15 minutes, when about 50 percent of the time a relationship is developing between the guest star and the lead cast member. Meanwhile, the evil folks are loose, and they shoot down/harm the good people or cancel their credit cards. More commercials. Then things are looking down into the third act, but the good folks build something or think up a plan of action "that sounds crazy, but just might work." This goes into more commercials with a little doubt in the air if they're going to win. Then there's the exciting conclusion, where all the bad guys die/lose in court/are defeated in a car chase which brings the cops by. And everyone's happy.

The thing that's great about that formula (and sitcoms are even easier than that), is at any time during the show, you could take off and come back, without missing any of the plot. Better than that, if you come back near the end, the antagonists always tell the protagonists just how their evil operation works.

"Well, since you're going to die anyways, let us tell you how Sinister Inc. works. We sell Metamucil around the world, and smuggle it into the United States through Amway. We then use the profits and buy college apartment complexes. When our tenants can't pay the rent, we have a new Metamucil dealer."

Fortunately for the free world, the bad people get their due dessert in the end, and the (living) good people can blab all this tidy info to the authorities.

It's gotten to the point where you can sit at home and write the script, word for word. It's fun to play this with friends. That's probably how "Hi Bob" came about, where you have to drink every time a character on The Bob Newhart Show says "Bob" or "Hi Bob." Certainly this is how Late Nite with David Letterman has succeeded, the show which thrives on the ashes of bad television.

Speaking of bad television, I love commercials. Commercials present a whole way of life that isn't even possibly real. It's great. All the hardships of life can be solved with a Diet Pepsi, Tide with Bleach and Tampax. Not only will everything be okay, it'll be better. Plus, you can sing some groovy jingles.

Being part of the generation that grew up on TV, we probably blew it. We missed experiences while we were watching the tube. It's so much easier not having to deal with the bills, the lack of money and people in general while we're mesmerized by The Box. We can travel the world without having to leave our living rooms, without having to question people, to experience malaria or to be actually hurt in a car chase. And, with each little adventure comes The Big Sell where, though you can't get the excitement the TV characters experience, you can still buy happiness through these products.

But so what? Those 80,000 hours of television I absorbed in my 21 years forever made me not respect it. I can appreciate quality entertainment better now, because I can't predict it. A good story mirrors real life, and life is completely insane. There are no final answers, no perfect solutions. Nothing wraps up in the space of an hour, if at all.

And that's why TV is comforting, because it is an organized unreality. It's the closest thing to utopia we've got. In that vein, there's nothing insane about the tube.

Second Opinion

U.S. funds should aid poor

More than half a million children in the Third World go blind every year from a disease called xerophthalmia, caused largely by a vitamin A deficiency and easily prevented — or corrected, if caught in time — with tablets that cost a few cents and need be taken only at long intervals.

And because one persistent scientist from Johns Hopkins University did the field work and then badgered Congress to do something about it, $8 million in U.S. funds were earmarked for this year to help in the global fight against preventable blindness. The big money goes for military assistance, which accounts for about two-thirds of U.S. foreign aid. Development aid is low on the priority list. It can be argued that this country's domestic agenda is so replete with unfinished business that there's no time, money, or sense of commitment left over for others' problems. But that's like saying that America is so diminished that it can no longer play any serious role outside its borders except in military terms. Who is ready to accept that? The Global Poverty Reduction Act has been supported by many in both the House and the Senate. If $8 million can help to achieve progress against preventable blindness, think what $500 million — less than the price of a Stealth warplane — could do against other maladies that persist not so much from a lack of means as from a lack of commitment. —Excerpted from The Fresno Bee

Blakely recall unethical, snares students

Editor — Picture this: you are an eager, somewhat confused college freshman in San Luis Obispo to live for the first time. You have come a week early to acquaint yourself with the Cal Poly campus, the area and to get your bearings before you begin the classes you hope will provide, in some way, the key to your future.

Walking through the University Union, you spot a table with two friendly women smiling and soliciting your consideration of their PROOF that County Supervisor David Blakely is a dangerous drug lord, SLO County's public enemy #1.

Impatient to exercise your new freedom and agreeing that, yes, drugs are certainly bad, you sign the petition to recall Blakely and feel that you have begun, at least, to participate in the local affairs of your new county.

What you don't realize is that you have been caught, "fresh off the train," without the benefit of accurate details or a balanced viewpoint, by people who are motivated by greed. A more sinister motivation appears to be a perverse need to continue publicly whipping Blakely, a superb supervisor elected last November, for past mistakes (over four years ago) that were over long before he became an elected public official.

The rich irony evoked by supporters of the Blakely recall, swelling with moral indignation, but using unethical tactics to push their cause, will, unfortunately, be lost on those of you who are fresh and new to our community.

More tragically, in misrepresenting the issues and in preying upon those of you in no position to have yet acquired the facts, they are undercutting, unfairly, the very principle that created and sustains university education: the quest for truth. Welcome.

Orchesis Dance Company frustrated about stolen posters

Editor — To our disbelief and frustration, five of the design posters were stolen off the new theater and dance department kiosks. The new kiosks were built this summer to provide a classy way to advertise current dance events. Howard Gee, the theater and dance department technical director, spent over 250 hours building the kiosks, in addition to many student-volunteered hours, including the artist Tom Vince.

The kiosks were placed around campus last weekend to advertise the Orchesis Dance Company's auditions to be held on Sept. 26, and the workshops on Sept. 22 and 24. The design boards were also intended to advertise the 20th Year Anniversary Dance concert on February 1-3. But, because Orchesis is a nonprofit organization, we do not have the funds to replace the design boards that were stolen.

This crime not only affects Orchesis, but it also affects the entire campus. The performing arts are one of the most underfunded and undersupported areas in the university. It takes many hours of student and faculty-volunteered time to give other students a chance to get involved in the performing arts and provide this cultural service to the campus.

It is flattering that the design was nice enough this year that someone wanted to take it. But it was wrong to take them. We would really like them back. To the person(s) responsible, please return them anonymously to the theater and dance department, no questions asked. In fact, if you'd like them after the concert, we'll give you them as a gift.

If anyone has any information about these stolen design boards, please call the theater and dance department at 756-1465.

Short Takes

Adviser honored

Jeanne Aceto, a job placement counselor for the School of Engineering, has been named CSU Administrative Fellow for 1989-90.

Aceto is adviser to the award-winning Cal Poly chapter of the Society of Women Engineers and works on programs to recruit women into engineering.

The Fellows program provides CSU employees an opportunity to work at the upper level of academic administration at one of the system's 20 campuses. The program focuses on opening up career paths for women and minorities.

Aceto is the seventh Cal Poly employee to participate in the CSU Administrative Fellows program, which started in 1978. Selection of Fellows results from nominations gathered by screening commissions and campus presidents.

Staff recognized

Three Cal Poly employees were recognized as outstanding staff employees for 1988-1989 at the annual Fall Conference on campus Sept. 11.

Honors went to Debbie Arseneau, class scheduler of the Academic Programs Office; June Powell, executive secretary of the University Relations Division; and Jacquie Rossi, clerical assistant of the University Warehouse/State Receiving Department.

Each of the outstanding employees received a certificate and a check for $300 from the Armistead B. Carter Endowment Fund.

Workshops slated

Sharon Nuemann Solow, an internationally known sign language interpreter, will be presenting workshops at Cal Poly on Thursday, Sept. 28.

The workshop, "Incorporating American Sign Language Techniques Into Transliteration," will take place at 1 p.m. in the conference room of the Health Center.

WOW is model for other colleges

By Robert Grove
Staff Writer

For many students, going to college means moving away from the securities of home for the first time.

Many universities try to make this transition as easy as possible for their students with the use of one, two or even three day orientations.

Cal Poly's Week Of Welcome has become a model for colleges around the country, said last year's WOW Board Chairman Ron Blumstein.

WOW is the university's unique way of not only familiarizing new students to the school and the city, but also letting them meet new people and have a lot of fun at the same time.

"By the time Monday comes, the students are ready to start school," Blumstein said. "We help them take care of getting their photo I.D., buying their books and getting them acquainted with the campus."

The beginning of WOW dates back to 1973, when "Uncle" Bob Walters, adviser for WOW, changed the orientation program at Cal Poly from a faculty-run operation to one run totally by students.

According to Blumstein, it was the first such program in the nation.

The main purpose of WOW is to help students adjust to a new way of life.

"The week really helps with homesickness," said Kathy Kelley, WOW counselor for group 142. "Everybody stayed too busy to even realize that they were away from home."

Kelley also said that one of the things that makes WOW so special is that it is completely free of alcohol.

"They found out that they didn't have to do anything illegal to have fun," she said.

WOW facilitator Capi Foote agreed.

"The most important thing about WOW is that it is non-alcoholic," she said. "People get to know each other as they really are, without any outside influences."

This was the second straight year in which WOW was free of complaints from the police.

This year WOW also made an effort to work with the community. "Cans for a Cause" was a contest in which groups tried to collect the most aluminum cans, with all the proceeds going to a local charity for children.

"This is our way of showing that we really care about the community," Blumstein said.

Although it seems like fun and games, WOW does have its foundation in the classroom.

"We feel that students cannot perform well academically, until they feel comfortable."

"We're gradually making the transition from wet to dry," Wardell said.

Another change is that rush has been shortened to one week. Other schools have been shortening their rush, Wardell said. He added that a shorter rush offers many advantages.

"The main reason is people will get back into school sooner and it won't affect their studies as much," he said.

How should someone interested in pledging a house approach rush? The IFC has some advice.

"They should try to see at least 10 houses the first two days," Wardell said. "Find out what each house has to offer, talk to as many guys as possible and just be yourself."

Water effort is far from over

Despite recent rains, San Luis Obispo remains in a water crisis.

Recent rainfall totals did not add significant water amounts to area reservoirs, said Tina Metzger, water conservation coordinator for the city.

"We would need quite a bit of rain to bring us out of our mandatory water conservation program," Metzger said.

She said the city is in its third year of drought, and water conservation should be a priority for everyone, especially students, since they compose a large part of the city's population.

"If all the students conserve, then we'll be a lot better off," she said.

Metzger said students are a "very important entity in the city and have a great impact on the conservation efforts here."

"We are very encouraged by the efforts of the city," she added. "We want to sustain the great response with help from the large population of students."

Surcharges on extra water usage likely is contributing to the success of the program.

If residents use more than their allotment, but less than the 1987 base year usage, the surcharge on the total billing will be 100 percent. In other words, the bill will be double.

If they use more than they did in 1987, the surcharge will be 200 percent.

Bill Statler, SLO finance director, said 85 percent of city residents met or used less than their target allocation.

Metzger explained that allocation levels are based on water levels at the two reservoirs the city draws upon: Whale Rock and Salinas reservoirs.

Water conservation efforts have helped but both remain severely low, she said.

Whale Rock stands at 52 percent capacity and Salinas is at 15 percent capacity, Metzger said.

In order to cancel the water rationing program, Metzger said the Salinas reservoir would have to fill up to 67 percent capacity.

Current conservation methods have resulted in a 35 to 50 percent drop in water use compared

Local Vons accepting credit soon

Students and credit cards have long been partners in getting through the high cost of school, work and life.

The cost of books, bikes, clothes and meals routinely are put on credit cards.

Now add groceries to that list.

Vons, at 1221 Marsh St. in San Luis Obispo, will soon be accepting Visa and Mastercard for grocery purchases.

Serge Fragione, Vons store manager, said his store plans to accept the credit cards early next week as a customer convenience.

"A minimum $25 purchase is the only stipulation," Fragione said.

Fragione said other Vons frequented by large numbers of college students have successfully put this program into operation, so he decided to do it in San Luis Obispo.

The Vons chain has accepted credit cards for about 10 years, he said.

Although Fragione did not know exact figures, he indicated that credit cards make up a "small percentage of sales."

Fragione didn't have a lot to say about students who may abuse credit but mentioned the benefits to credit card users.

"If you don't misuse it, it can be a good tool in managing finances," Fragione said.

He said reports from other stores with heavy student customer sales indicate that students enjoy using their credit cards.

Most grocers try to keep away from accepting credit cards because it is a lot of extra paperwork, he said.

Lawson Williams of Williams Bros. Markets said he has considered adopting credit cards.

Jack Daoust, manager of the Lucky on Foothill Boulevard, said some Lucky stores accept credit cards for non-food items.

"The store on Madonna Road accepts it for those things," Daoust said.

He said a number of years ago Lucky and other grocery retailers accepted credit cards but ran into trouble with payments.

"People usually want to have something to show for charging so it became such a hassle that they dropped the program," Daoust said.

Flo-Jo accused of buying growth hormones

NEW YORK (AP) — Florence Griffith Joyner, accused by Darrell Robinson of buying growth hormones from him, on Thursday called the sprinter "a compulsive, crazy, lying, lunatic."

"I don't do drugs," Griffith Joyner said. "I never have taken any drugs. I don't believe in them. It's a false accusation."

Robinson detailed his dealings with the 1988 Olympic heroine and other track-and-field athletes and coaches, including Carl Lewis, in the West German magazine Stern. Robinson repeated the charges Thursday on NBC-TV's "Today" show.

Griffith Joyner, accompanied by her husband Al Joyner, the 1984 Olympic triple jump champion, and business manager

Gordon Baskin, flew from her California home to New York for the early morning show in hopes of meeting her accuser. Robinson failed to show up, but the two confronted each other via a hookup from his Toronto home, and the rhetoric was bitter.

"How can you have the nerve ... to tell a false lie?" Griffith Joyner said angrily.

"She says she didn't take them (drugs)," Robinson said. "It's my word against hers."

"You admitted taking drugs and why do you want to implicate other athletes?" Griffith Joyner said.

Robinson, who reportedly received at least $25,000 for the magazine story and money for appearing on TV, denied he was doing it just for the money.

"The money issue isn't an issue," he said. "I am sick and tired of hearing everyone saying they're clean."

Robinson, the 1986 national champion at 400 meters, contended in the story that Griffith Joyner asked him to get growth hormones for her last year, because "I have connections."

He said she paid him $2,000 in 20 $100 bills in mid-March of 1988 for the hormones, and that the transaction took place Venice Boulevard in Los Angeles.

Robinson alleges that Griffith Joyner asked him check the cost of the hormones. He said that, when she learned it would cost $2,000 she said, "That's crazy."

He said Griffith Joyner said, "If you want to make a million, you've got to invest a few thousand."

Robinson says that a few days later, Griffith Joyner gave him a "wad of 20 hundred-dollar bills."

"I never gave him a dime for anything," Griffith Joyner said. "Why meet him on Venice Boulevard? The only place I met him on the track. I have never run into Darrell on the street."

"I don't know how he's going to back this up."

USAir 737 crashes during takeoff, kills two passengers

NEW YORK (AP) — A USAir 737 carrying 62 people skidded off a runway on takeoff from LaGuardia Airport late Wednesday, landing in the East River near the city jail at Rikers Island, authorities said.

At least two people were killed, said Fire Department Dispatcher Adam Krause. The Port Authority also said it had reports of fatalities.

Officials had no figures on possible injuries.

One passenger reported that the aircraft split into two or three pieces.

Some people were trapped in the plane's tail section and were being removed, said Coast Guard Lt. Commander Paul Milligan.

Milligan said the plane skidded off the runway during takeoff and landed in the water, about 2,000 feet from the end of the runway, at 11:35 p.m. EDT.

The Coast Guard said the plane remained afloat and was in water 25 to 40 feet deep.

"They've got people in water in life rafts, some people in tail section," said Petty Officer Gary Rives. "The plane is sitting at a 60-degree angle in the water with the cockpit down."

A USAir spokeswoman in Pittsburgh, Susan Young, said Flight 5050, a Boeing 737-400, was bound for Charlotte, N.C.

"We do have an airplane that appears to have gone into the water at LaGuardia," said Young. "On takeoff it went off the end of the runway and is now partially submerged in the water."

The pilot tried to abort the takeoff for an unknown reason, said Kathleen Bergen, spokeswoman for the Federal Aviation Administration in New York.

The plane was carrying 55 passengers and seven crew members and was being evacuated, said a Fire Department spokesman, John Mulligan.

Mulligan said survivors were being transported to the Pan Am Shuttle terminal at LaGuardia.

Summer crime report

Campus hit by theft, arson

With students returning to Cal Poly from a summer break, it can be expected that crime on campus will increase, according to a Cal Poly Public Safety investigator.

"It is not because students are involved in the crimes," said Investigator Raymond Berrett, "but it is because they are the victims."

Here is a recap of some of the crimes which occurred during the summer.

- With the help from an anonymous tip, two out of three television sets stolen from the Fisher Science Building were recovered. The sets were found in the middle of a field off South Broad after they were reported missing on July 5. The case is still under investigation.

- Construction of the new information booth at the corner of Grand and Slack is almost completed, after suffering about $500 damage from a fire on July 13. The fire apparently started with the use of gasoline, Berrett said. The case is still under investigation.

- A man was arrested in August in his vehicle outside of the Business Administration Building for exposing himself. This was the third such incident of the summer. The Templeton man is currently on trial after admitting to the police that he was responsible for each of the previous incidents.

- Over the summer, an average of one bicycle per day was stolen on campus. In fact, Berrett said, over $30,000 in bicycles have been stolen from Cal Poly over the last two years.

WATER

to the target allocations doled out by the city, Metzger said.

The city asked for only a 20 percent reduction "so 35 to 50 percent is great," she said.

However, if future rainfall amounts do not fill up the reservoirs, then Metzger said San Luis Obispo plans on new allocation plans for next year.

"I can't say exactly what we'll do because we don't know what will happen," Metzger said.

She said the city has not considered cloud seeding, a method that increases the chance of rain from clouds.

Metzger suggested some things students can do to assist the city in conserving water:

- Refrain from washing your car at your home.
- Let your lawns go brown.

- Run the dishwasher and washing machine only when there is a full load.
